

THE HONORABLE JOHN C. COUGHENOUR

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT SEATTLE

GREGORY CARTER M.D., et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

JAY INSLEE, et al.,

Defendants.

CASE NO. C16-0809-JCC

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS FOR LACK OF SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION AND
FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

This matter comes before the Court on Defendants' Motion to Dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and failure to state a claim (Dkt. No. 20), Plaintiffs' Response (Dkt. No. 24), and Defendants' Reply (Dkt. No. 26). Having thoroughly considered the parties' briefing and the relevant record, the Court finds oral argument unnecessary and hereby GRANTS the motion for the reasons explained herein.

I. BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs bring this cause of action for declaratory and injunctive relief. Plaintiffs request a declaration that Senate Bill 5052 ("SB 5052), also known as the Cannabis Patient Protection Act ("CPPA"), violates the federal Controlled Substances Act ("CSA") and "one or more provisions of the U.S. Constitution," and is thus subject to preemption. (Dkt. No. 23 at 3, 26.)

The CPPA deals with access to medical marijuana in Washington State.

A. History of Marijuana Laws in Washington State

In 1998, Washington State passed Washington Initiative Measure No. 692 (“I-692”), authorizing the use of medical marijuana for terminal and debilitating conditions. (Dkt. No. 18 at 1). I-692 is also known as the Washington State Medical Use of Marijuana Act (“MUMA”). Rev. Code Wash. § 69.51A. MUMA did not legalize medical marijuana; medical marijuana was still illegal under the CSA, 21 U.S.C. § 801, et seq., and the Washington Uniform Controlled Substances Act, Rev. Code Wash. § 69.50, et seq. Instead, MUMA provided doctors, patients, and primary caregivers charged with violating the State’s controlled substances law with an affirmative defense to criminal prosecution. (Dkt. No. 18-1 at 3; see also Rev. Code Wash. § 69.51A.005.) In order to receive MUMA’s protections, patients were required to obtain an authorization from a health care provider. (Id.) Once authorized, patients could possess up to a 60-day supply of marijuana. (Dkt. No. 18-1 at 3.) However, MUMA did not identify what amount of marijuana equated to a 60-day supply, and did not specify how qualifying individuals were to obtain marijuana. (See Id.)

In 2012, Washington State passed Washington Initiative Measure No. 502 (“I-502”). I-502, available at http://sos.wa.gov/_assets/elections/initiatives/i502.pdf. I-502 legalized the possession and recreational use of marijuana for adults, and established a “regulatory program for the intrastate production, processing, and retail sales of marijuana.” (Dkt. No. 18 at 2.) The State Liquor and Cannabis Board (“LCB”) received regulatory authority of the recreational marijuana retail market. (Id.; see also I-502 § 1(3).) Processing began in 2013, and retail sales have been ongoing since 2014. (Id.)

While I-502 legalized marijuana, marijuana remains a controlled substance under federal law. 21 U.S.C. §§ 841, 844 (2012). Since I-502’s passage, the Department of Justice (“DOJ”)

1 issued a policy statement, known as the “Cole memo,” stating that the DOJ would not intervene 2 or challenge state legalization of marijuana so long as states maintained a strict system of 3 regulation addressing the threats marijuana legalization could pose to public safety, public
4 health, and other law enforcement interests. (Dkt. No. 18-2 at 2–3.) The Cole memo
5 acknowledged that “the federal government has traditionally relied on states and local law
6 enforcement agencies to address marijuana activity through enforcement of their own narcotics
7 laws.” (Id. at 2.) However, the federal government indicated that a state’s failure to implement an 8 effective regulatory scheme for marijuana legalization may result in federal intervention. (Id. at 9 4.) The federal government has not attempted to intervene in the implementation of I-502. (Dkt.
10 No. 18 at 2.)

12 I-502 regulated and legalized recreational marijuana, however medical marijuana
13 remained unregulated and illegal, with MUMA continuing to provide qualifying individuals an 14 affirmative defense when charged with violating the State’s controlled substances law. (Dkt. No.
15 18 at 2.) However, in 2015, the Washington Legislature adopted the CPPA. LAWS of 2015 SB
16 5052, c 70, available at http://lawfilesexst.leg.wa.gov/biennium/2015-16/Pdf/Bills/Senate%20Pas
17 sed%20Legislature/5052-S2.PL.pdf. The CPPA amends MUMA, “requiring the integration of 18 the unregulated medical marijuana market and the recreational marijuana market.” (Dkt. No. 18
19 at 3.) Thus, the CPPA establishes regulatory oversight of medical marijuana in Washington State
20 for the first time. (Id.)

22 Under the CPPA, medical marijuana users are still required to obtain an authorization
23 form from their health care provider. See Rev. Code Wash. § 69.51A.030(3). However, the form
24 now used for authorization is standardized, and was developed by the Department of Health
25 (“DOH”). Id. The form is required to include the qualifying patient or designated providers’

1 personal information, i.e. name, address, date of birth, and the amount of marijuana
2 recommended for the qualifying patient. Id. Further, medical marijuana may now only be 3 purchased from a retail outlet with a medical marijuana endorsement. LAWS of 2015 SB 5052, 4 c 70, at 23–24. In order to receive a medical marijuana endorsement, marijuana retailers must 5 maintain an official department record of all medical marijuana applicants and authorization
6 holders in a medical marijuana authorization database (“database”) that the DOH administers.
7 Retailers must employ at least one medical marijuana consultant to maintain the database. WAC
8 314-55-080. Medical marijuana consultants are required to complete a training or education
9 program and pass a criminal background check prior to receiving their license. Rev. Code Wash.
10 § 69.51A.290. Only a medical marijuana consultant is permitted to enter qualifying patients or 11 providers’ authorization information into the database. WAC 246-71-020. The information that 12 the consultant must enter includes valid photographic identification, full legal name, date of 13 birth, address, and the patient’s qualifying conditions. Id.

14
15 Patients may choose not to be entered into the database. See Rev. Code Wash.

16
17 § 69.51A.210. If a qualifying patient submits to being entered into the database, they are issued a 18 recognition card by the marijuana retailer. Rev. Code Wash. § 69.51A.230. Those who submit to 19 being entered are able to purchase a greater variety and quantity of marijuana than those 20 purchasing marijuana recreationally. (Dkt. No. 18 at 4; see also Rev. Code Wash. § 69.51A.210.)
21 Further, they receive the ability to grow up to six marijuana plants in their domicile. (Id.) If a 22 health care provider specifies that an individual’s condition requires more than six plants, she is 23 authorized to grow up to 15. (Id.)

24
25 Medical marijuana users who choose not to be entered into the database but possess a 26 medical marijuana authorization “may only purchase the same quantity and types of marijuana as

1 the recreational user.” (Dkt. No. 18 at 4; see also Rev. Code Wash. § 69.51A.210.) While they 2 maintain the ability to assert an affirmative defense to prosecution, they “do not have the same
3 legal protections from arrest, seizure, and charges as patients entered into the database.” (Dkt.
4 No. 18 at 4.) Further, they may grow no more than four marijuana plants. Rev. Code Wash.
5 § 69.51A.210.

6 A minor patient may receive a medical marijuana authorization if her parent or guardian
7 consents to her use of medical marijuana and agrees to act as her designated provider. Rev. Code
8 Wash. § 69.51A.220. While non-minor patients are not required to be entered into the database, 9 both the minor child and parent or guardian who is acting as her designated provider must 10 consent to being entered into the database and hold a recognition card. Id. Finally, minors with a 11 medical marijuana authorization are not permitted to grow marijuana plants. Id.

12 Information entered into the database is subject to strict privacy requirements, and access
13 to the information is limited. See Rev. Code Wash. § 69.51A.230. Only marijuana consultants
14 have full access to the database. WAC 246-71-020. Employees other than marijuana consultants 15 “may verify that a patient is in the database when selling the patient medical products . . . in 16 quantities and types different than the recreational purchaser,” however, “their access is limited 17 to the same public data as is on the recognition cards,” which does not include information about 18 the patients’ diagnoses. (Dkt. No. 20 at 5; Dkt. No. 18-3 at 4.) Information contained in the 19 database is not shared with the federal government or its agents “unless the particular 20 [qualifying] patient or designated provider is convicted in state court for violating” the CPPA or 21 the Washington State Uniform Controlled Substances Act. Rev. Code Wash. § 69.51.230. If a 22 retailer violates the limitations on access to the database or discloses information from the 23 database, they may be prosecuted for a Class C felony. Rev. Code Wash. § 69.51.240.

B. The Present Litigation

Plaintiff Eric Mevis (“Mevis”) is a medical marijuana patient who suffers from a rare, terminal neurodegenerative disorder and experiences extreme pain, muscle spasms, an inability to speak or swallow, and wasting. (Dkt. No. 23 at 5.) The use of medical marijuana has been essential to managing his symptoms. (Id. at 6.) Plaintiff Meagan Holt (“Holt”) is the mother of a 36-month-old daughter who suffers from a rare degenerative genetic condition, experiences seizures, and is blind. (Id.) Holt uses marijuana to manage her daughter’s illness. (Id.) Plaintiff Dr. Gregory Carter (“Carter”) is a physician with twenty-five years’ experience who “treats numerous patients for whom he believes marijuana is a medically appropriate form of treatment.” (Id. at 3.)

Plaintiffs assert 28 U.S.C. § 1331 federal question jurisdiction, arguing that the doctrine of Ex Parte Young provides this Court with equitable jurisdiction to hear their claims. Plaintiffs oppose the CPPA, arguing that its implementation violates the CSA. (Dkt. No. 23 at 26.) Further, Plaintiffs argue that the CPPA infringes on their First, Fourth, and Fifth Amendment rights. Specifically, Plaintiffs object to the CPPA’s regulations, including (1) its use of the standardized authorization form in prescribing medical marijuana in specific doses, (2) its requirement that physicians divulge patients’ medical conditions to third-parties on the authorization that patients take to marijuana retailers, and (3) its requirement that the information on the authorization form be stored in a database if patients are to receive the full benefits and legal protections of the CPPA. (See Id. at 15, 18.)

Plaintiffs allege that these requirements violate their First, Fourth, and Fifth Amendment rights for several reasons. First, Plaintiffs argue that the CPPA’s regulations infringe on their “First Amendment protected doctor-patient relationship” by impermissibly restricting the content

1 of doctor-patient speech and requiring doctors to violate federal law. (Dkt. No. 23 at 24.)
2 Plaintiffs further allege that the CPPA's requirement that the authorization form be used to 3 prescribe a specific amount of marijuana, and that this form be shared with a third-party at a 4 marijuana retail shop, infringes on their doctor-patient relationship and right to not have this 5 relationship interfered with by the state. (Id. at 6, 15.) Additionally, Plaintiffs contend that 6 requiring them to use a state-sanctioned third party database, and then making that database
7 accessible to a multitude of users, violates their Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable
8 searches and seizures. (Id. at 25.) Finally, Plaintiffs argue that the CPPA violates their Fifth 9 Amendment right against self-incrimination by mandating use of the authorization form and 10 requiring that their personal information be entered into the database if they are to receive the 11 full benefits and protections of the legislation. (Id. at 24–25). Thus, Plaintiffs' constitutional 12 injuries are rooted in concern over an increased likelihood of federal criminal prosecution for 13 CSA violations under the CPPA's medical marijuana regime. (See also Dkt. No. 7 at 7)
14 (“Doctors and patients are now being required to participate in a system that puts both at risk by 15 violating federal law with no defense available in federal court.”).

18 Additionally, Plaintiff Mevis makes allegations regarding the CPPA's impact on his 19 ability to access the amount of marijuana required to treat his illness. (Dkt. No. 23 at 17–18.)
20 Plaintiff Mevis alleges that the maximum amount of marijuana available to him under the CPPA, 21 15 plants if he consents to being entered into the database, is “not enough marijuana to treat his 22 illness.” (Id. at 17.) If Plaintiff Mevis does not consent to being entered into the database, he will 23 be entitled to possess less marijuana. (Id. at 17–18.) Plaintiff Mevis asserts that “none of these 24 options will meet [his] medical needs.” (Id. at 18.) Further, Plaintiff Holt alleges that requiring 25 her to enter both her and her daughter's information into the database in order to receive 26

1 marijuana to treat her daughter's illness requires her to "face the Hobson's choice of doing what
2 is medically best for her daughter or violating the law." (Id. at 6.) Thus, Plaintiff Holt alleges two 3 potential injuries. First, that compliance with the CPPA violates her constitutional rights. Second,
4 that refusing to comply with the CPPA's provisions prevents her from obtaining the marijuana
5 her daughter requires.

6 Plaintiffs bring this action against Defendants, Washington State officials in their official 7 capacity, seeking a permanent injunction enjoining the Defendants from enforcing the CPPA.
8 (Dkt. No. 23 at 26.) Plaintiffs further seek declaration from this Court that the CPPA is 9 "unconstitutional on its face and as applied, violative of federal law, and subject to federal 10 preemption." (Id.)

11 Defendants move to dismiss Plaintiffs' cause of action under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) for 12 lack of subject matter jurisdiction and under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim 13 on which relief may be granted. (Dkt. No. 20 at 1.)

14 II. DISCUSSION

15 A. Standard of Review

16 Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a), a pleading must contain "a short and plain statement of the 17 claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a). While a complaint "does 18 not need detailed factual allegations," a plaintiff's complaint must provide "more than labels and 19 conclusions." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555 (2007). To survive a motion to 20 dismiss, "a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim to 21 relief that is plausible on its face." Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009). A claim is 22 facially plausible when "the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the 23 reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Id. While this
25
26

1 standard “is not akin to a probability requirement,” it requires more than a “sheer possibility that 2 a defendant has acted unlawfully.” Id. When considering a motion to dismiss, a court can 3 identify “pleadings that, because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the 4 assumption of truth,” and dismiss those claims accordingly. Id. at 679.

5 6 B. Equitable Jurisdiction

7 Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331–1332 (2012). 28
8 U.S.C. § 1331 establishes federal jurisdiction for actions “arising under the Constitution, laws, or 9 treaties of the United States.” 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (2012). “A case arise[es] under federal law
10 within the meaning of § 1331 . . . if a well-pleaded complaint establishes either that federal law
11 creates the cause of action or that the plaintiff’s right to relief necessarily depends on resolution
12 of a substantial question of federal law.” Cook Inlet Region, Inc. v. Rude, 690 F.3d 1127, 1130
13 (9th Cir. 2012) (quoting Empire Healthchoice Assurance, Inc. v. McVeigh, 547 U.S. 677, 689–90 14 (2006) (internal quotation marks omitted)). Federal law creates the cause of action when a 15 complaint “is so drawn as to seek recovery directly under the Constitution or laws of the United 16 States.” Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 681 (1946). Determining whether a claim presents a 17 substantial question of federal law largely requires looking to congressional intent in enacting the 18 statute implicated by the claim. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals Inc. v. Thompson, 478 U.S. 804,
19 814 (1986). Courts must not disturb the “congressionally-approved balance of federal and state 20 judicial responsibilities.” Grable & Sons Metal Prod., Inc. v. Darue Eng’g & Mfg., 545 U.S. 308, 21 314 (2005). Thus, if Congress has failed to provide a private cause of action in enacting a federal 22 statute, federal-question jurisdiction on the basis of that statute is likely precluded. See Merrell
23 Dow Pharmaceuticals Inc., 478 U.S. at 814. However, the lack of a private right of action is not
26

1 dispositive to finding that Congress intended to allow federal-question jurisdiction when 2 enacting a statute. Grable & Sons Metal Products, Inc., 545 U.S. at 314.

3 Plaintiffs seek to invoke this Court’s § 1331 jurisdiction in equity via the doctrine of Ex
4 Parte Young, alleging that this doctrine raises a federal question. They allege that they are 5 “seeking the traditional forms of equitable relief, declaratory judgment, and permanent 6 injunction available when a state or local officer is injuring plaintiffs by implementing a law or 7 policy that conflicts with federal law.” (Dkt. No 23 at 23.) Plaintiffs assert that “equitable relief 8 is traditionally available to enforce federal law and vindicate constitutional rights,” and that the 9 CPPA violates the federal CSA. (Id. at 23, 26.) Plaintiffs further allege that their “First, Fourth, 10 and Fifth Amendment rights are violated by state actors seeking enforcement” of the CPPA. (Id.
11 at 23.) Thus, according to Plaintiffs, this Court has equitable jurisdiction to hear their claims.
12 (Dkt. No. 24 at 2.)

14 Defendants argue that Plaintiffs may not utilize equitable jurisdiction as the basis for their 15 claims. According to Defendants, in order “for a federal court to exercise its equitable authority 16 to enjoin unlawful executive action, Congress must have authorized private enforcement of the 17 federal law at issue.” (Dkt. No. 20 at 6.) Because there is no private right of action to enforce the 18 CSA, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs cannot rely on equitable jurisdiction as a basis for federal 19 jurisdiction. (Id.) Additionally, Defendants argue that because Plaintiffs’ “constitutional claims
20 ultimately implicate their preemption claim” by focusing on a “fear . . . of criminal prosecution 21 under the CSA,” Plaintiffs cannot invoke this Court’s equitable jurisdiction to hear their 22 constitutional claims. (Dkt. No. 26 at 9.)

a. Legal Standard

The doctrine of Ex Parte Young provides that a plaintiff may bring a suit against a state officer to enjoin violations of rights protected by the Constitution or afforded by federal law. See Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123, 159–60 (1908); Davis v. Gray, 83 U.S. 203, 216 (1872) (“ . . . a Circuit Court of the United States, in a proper case in equity, may enjoin a State officer from executing a State law in conflict with the Constitution or a statute of the United States, when such execution will violate the rights of the complainant.”) A plaintiff who seeks injunctive relief from state regulation that violates constitutionally afforded rights has a right of action that arises under the Constitution, granting federal courts § 1331 jurisdiction. See Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. at 159–60. A plaintiff seeking such relief from state regulation that violates federally afforded rights “on the ground that such regulation is pre-empted by a federal statute . . . thus presents a federal question which the federal courts” have § 1331 jurisdiction to resolve. Shaw v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., 463 U.S. 85, 96 (1983). “Where legal rights have been invaded, and a federal statute provides for a general right to sue for such invasion,” federal courts may exercise equitable jurisdiction to remedy the violations. See Bell, 327 U.S. at 684. However, if a federal statute provides no general right to sue for the invasion of legal rights, federal courts may only exercise equitable jurisdiction if congressional intent indicates a desire to permit equitable relief. See Armstrong v. Exceptional Child Ctr., Inc., 135 S. Ct. 1378, 1385 (2015).

b. Controlled Substances Act

Plaintiffs seek to invoke equitable jurisdiction via the doctrine of Ex Parte Young to receive declaration from this Court that the CPPA violates the federal CSA, and is thus preempted by the CSA. (Dkt. No. 23 at 26.) In doing so, Plaintiffs improperly invoke this Court’s equitable powers.

1 Equitable jurisdiction and the doctrine of Ex Parte Young seek to protect federally
2 afforded rights against invasion by state regulation. However, the CSA does not grant rights to 3 individual citizens; instead, the CSA seeks to “conquer drug abuse and to control the legitimate
4 and illegitimate traffic in controlled substances” by introducing a “closed regulatory system
5 making it unlawful to manufacture, distribute, dispense, or possess any controlled substance
6 except in a manner authorized by the CSA.” Gonzales v. Raich, 545 U.S. 1, 12–14 (2005); see 21
7 U.S.C. §§ 841(a)(1), 844(a) (2012). In this way, the CSA regulates behavior by restricting
8 individuals’ rights with regards to the substances enumerated in the CSA. While Plaintiffs may 9 utilize equitable jurisdiction to vindicate rights afforded by federal law and violated by state 10 regulation, they cannot do so when claiming state violation of a federal law that affords no rights.
11 Accordingly, equitable jurisdiction is not proper with regards to Plaintiffs’ CSA claims.

13 Even if Plaintiffs could bring a claim in equity to enforce the CSA, which they cannot,
14 recent Supreme Court jurisprudence emphasizes that Congress intended to foreclose this ability 15 when enacting the CSA. The “power of federal courts of equity to enjoin unlawful executive 16 action is subject to express and implied statutory limitations,” as “courts of equity can no more 17 disregard statutory and constitutional requirements and provisions than can courts of law.”
18 Armstrong, 135 S. Ct. at 1384–1385. The Supreme Court has identified two factors that indicate
19 Congress intended to foreclose equitable relief when enacting a statute: (1) the express provision 20 of a single method of statutory enforcement, and (2) the “judicially unadministrable” nature of 21 enforcing that method. Id. at 1385.

23 The CSA expressly provides that the United States Attorney General will enforce its 24 provisions. See 21 USC §§ 841–51, § 881, § 875 (2012). As a federal criminal statute, it contains 25 no mechanism of enforcement against the states. See 21 U.S.C. § 903 (2012) (speaking only to 26

1 preemption of state law in “positive conflict” with the CSA, and not to enforcement remedies
2 against a state in violation of CSA provisions). Only where Congress has provided express
3 provisions for enforcement of a statute against a state should the court refuse to exercise
4 equitable jurisdiction via the doctrine of Ex Parte Young. See Seminole Tribe of Florida, 517
5 U.S. 44, 74 (1996); Armstrong, 135 S. Ct. at 1385 (holding Medicaid Act’s specification of 6 enforcement provisions against a state foreclosed plaintiffs from bringing equitable jurisdiction
7 claim). However, because the CSA restricts individual rights, and not state rights, relative to the 8 substances controlled by its provisions, its lack of a mechanism for enforcement against the 9 states is inconsequential. Further, given the extreme complexity of judicial enforcement of the 10 CSA against a state, the exercise of equitable jurisdiction is improper in this case.

12 Thus, while the CSA did not “affirmatively preclude the availability of a judge-made 13 action at equity,” this Court cannot exercise equitable jurisdiction with regards to Plaintiffs’ CSA 14 allegations. Armstrong, 135 S. Ct. at 1386. Plaintiffs have failed to assert a right afforded by the 15 CSA and protected in equity. Further, analyzing equitable enforcement of the CSA utilizing the 16 Supreme Court’s two factor test indicates that equitable jurisdiction is improperly exercised in 17 relation to the CSA. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have failed to state a CSA claim.

19 c. Constitutional Claims

20 Additionally, Plaintiffs seek to invoke the Court’s equitable jurisdiction to receive 21 injunctive and declaratory relief with regards to Defendants’ alleged violations of their First,
22 Fourth, and Fifth Amendment rights. Unlike the CSA, all three Amendments afford Plaintiffs 23 affirmative rights that arise under the Constitution. Thus, this Court properly exercises equitable 24 jurisdiction in relation to Plaintiffs’ asserted violations of their constitutional rights.

C. Plaintiffs' Standing for Fourth and Fifth Amendment Claims

Prior to analyzing whether Plaintiffs have adequately stated a claim, the Court addresses whether Plaintiffs have standing to bring a lawsuit alleging that the CPPA violates their Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights by increasing their likelihood for future federal prosecution.

The doctrine of standing is “an essential and unchanging part of the case-or-controversy requirement of Article III.” Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). In order for a plaintiff to have standing to bring a claim, she must demonstrate:

(1) injury in fact, by which we mean an invasion of a legally protected interest that is (a) concrete and particularized, and (b) actual or imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical ; (2) a causal relationship between the injury and the challenged conduct, by which we mean that the injury fairly can be traced to the challenged action of the defendant, and has not resulted from the independent action of some third party not before the court, and (3) a likelihood that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision, by which we mean that the prospect of obtaining relief from the injury as a result of a favorable ruling is not too speculative.

Ne. Florida Chapter of Associated Gen. Contractors of Am. v. City of Jacksonville, Fla., 508 U.S. 656, 663–664 (1993) (internal quotations omitted).

A violation of an individually afforded constitutional right provides a basis for standing. See Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. To Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208, 220–222 (1974). However, “abstract injury is not enough. The plaintiff must show that he has sustained or is immediately in danger of sustaining some direct injury” as the result of the challenged official conduct. City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 101–102 (1983). Further, when a plaintiff seeks equitable relief in the form of an injunction or declaratory judgment, he must show “irreparable injury, a requirement that cannot be met where there is no showing of any real or immediate threat that the plaintiff will be wronged.” City of Los Angeles, 461 U.S. at 111. For this reason, speculative

1 claims that allege a future injury will not suffice to sustain a claim for equitable relief. Id.

2 Instead, a plaintiff must demonstrate a substantial likelihood of future harm. Id.

3 Plaintiffs allege violations of their Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights, arguing that the 4 CPPA's regulations subject them to unreasonable searches and seizures and force them to 5 disclose self-incriminating information. However, these allegations fail to state a future injury 6 with any substantial certainty, as required by the doctrine of standing when a plaintiff seeks 7 equitable relief.

9 The Department of Justice's Cole memo explicitly states that the federal government will 10 not intervene with marijuana legalization if "states and local governments that have enacted laws 11 authorizing marijuana-related conduct will implement strong and effective regulatory and 12 enforcement systems that will address the threat those state laws could pose to public safety, 13 public health, and other law enforcement interests." (Dkt. No. 18-2 at 2.) Thus, while Plaintiffs 14 argue that the CPPA's regulations make them more vulnerable to federal prosecution, the Cole
15 memo indicates just the opposite. By enacting a strict system for medical marijuana regulation,
16 the CPPA decreases Plaintiffs' likelihood of federal prosecution relative to MUMA's previously 17 unregulated medical marijuana regime. While the Cole memo "does not alter in any way the 18 Department's authority to enforce federal law . . . regardless of state law," it provides sufficient 19 basis for this Court to conclude that Plaintiffs have not demonstrated with any degree of 20 substantial certainty that future injury, in the form of federal prosecution, is likely to occur. (Id.
21 at 4.) Thus, Plaintiffs have failed to articulate an injury entitling them to equitable relief under 22 the doctrine of standing. Absent an injury, Plaintiffs do not have standing to allege that the CPPA
23 violates their Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights. Accordingly, this Court cannot issue equitable 24 relief with regards to these allegations.

D. Plaintiffs' Failure to State a Claim under the First Amendment

A lack of standing forecloses Plaintiffs' ability to assert that the CPPA violates their Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights by increasing their likelihood for future federal prosecution. However, Plaintiffs allege that the CPPA infringes on their First Amendment rights by articulating an injury independent of their Fourth and Fifth Amendment claims. Further, Plaintiffs Mevis and Holt allege an injury pertaining to the CPPA's impact on their ability to obtain marijuana relative to their previous ability under MUMA. In addressing these allegations, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim.

First, Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts sufficient to find an impermissible infringement on their doctor-patient relationship, protected by the First Amendment. The First Amendment states that "Congress shall make no law...abridging the freedom of speech." U.S. Const. amend. I. The doctor-patient relationship is given First Amendment constitutional protection, and "needlessly broad" regulations that intrude on this relationship are deemed unconstitutional. Whalen v. Roe, 429 U.S. 589, 596 (1977). While the government has long reserved the right to exercise its police powers to regulate professional conduct, individuals do not abandon their First Amendment rights when they begin practicing a profession that is subject to state regulation. Stuart v. Cannitz, 774 F.3d 238, 247 (4th Cir. 2014); Conant v. Walters, 309 F.3d 629, 637 (9th Cir. 2002).

The First Amendment rights of professionals exist on a continuum. Pickup v. Brown, 740 F.3d 1208, 1227 (9th Cir. 2013). "Doctor-patient communications about medical treatment receive substantial First Amendment protection, but the government has more leeway to regulate the conduct necessary to administering treatment itself." Id. (emphasis added). Speech may be implicated in the regulation of conduct, and First Amendment protection does not apply to

1 conduct that is not “inherently expressive.” Rumsfeld v. Forum for Academic & Institutional
2 Rights, Inc., 547 U.S. 47 (2006). Additionally, if regulations do not compel a doctor to represent 3 an opinion contrary to the one he or she holds, the regulations do not significantly impinge on the 4 doctor’s right of free speech. Rust v. Sullivan, 500 U.S. 173, 200 (1991). A requirement that 5 forces physicians to say things that they otherwise would not say is compelled speech. Stuart, 6 774 F.3d at 246. Compelled speech receives First Amendment protections. Hurley v. Irish-Am.
7 Gay, Lesbian & Bisexual Grp. of Bos., 515 U.S. 557, 576 (1995).

9 Plaintiffs allege that the CPPA impermissibly regulates doctor-patient speech, in 10 violation of their First Amendment rights. Specifically, Plaintiffs argue that the CPPA’s 11 requirement that doctors prescribe an amount of marijuana to a patient on the authorization form,
12 as well as bring the authorization form to a non-medical third-party, infringes on the doctor-
13 patient relationship. However, these regulations do not amount to an impermissible regulation of 14 First Amendment, doctor-patient protected speech. The State is permitted to regulate the conduct
15 of doctors acting in their official capacity, just as the CPPA does. The CPPA’s regulations do not 16 apply to conduct that is “inherently expressive.” Instead, the CPPA merely requires doctors to 17 prescribe a specific amount of marijuana to patients, as doctors are required to do anytime they 18 issue a prescription. Further, such a universally practiced requirement, that doctors write 19 prescriptions, can hardly be considered compelled speech, in violation of doctors’ First 20 Amendment rights. While Plaintiffs contend that presenting the authorization form to a third-21 party at a marijuana retail shop further infringes on their doctor-patient protections, these 22 assertions amount to nothing more than conclusory statements. (See Dkt No. 23 at 15) (“The 23 requirement that the form be used and a non-medical third party participate in the process 24 impermissibly infringes on the doctor-patient relationship.”) Plaintiffs fail to present facts to

1 support these allegations. Thus, Plaintiffs have failed to articulate a cognizable First Amendment 2 injury.

3 Additionally, Plaintiffs Mevis and Holts' allegations regarding the accessibility of 4 medical marijuana under the CPPA are incapable of sustaining this action in court. Not only do
5 these allegations fail to state facts sufficient to find a federally recognized right to bring this 6 action, but they fail to assert a violation of a protected right. As Plaintiffs have indicated, there is 7 no recognized right to marijuana, and marijuana is illegal under the CSA. Thus, Plaintiffs cannot 8 assert that the CPPA's restriction on, or denial of, their access to marijuana constitutes an 9 impermissible infringement on protected activity sufficient to sustain this cause of action.
10 Seeking medical marijuana is entirely optional. While the Court greatly sympathizes with the 11 symptoms that Plaintiff Mevis and Plaintiff Holt's daughter are forced to manage, the lack of a 12 legally recognized right to marijuana forecloses a determination that the impact of the CPPA on 13 their access to marijuana constitutes a legally cognizable injury.
14

15 Thus, Plaintiffs' have failed to state a claim alleging violations of their First Amendment 16 protected, doctor-patient relationship, as well as alleging injury based on a decreased access to 17 medical marijuana. Accordingly, Plaintiffs are incapable of maintaining a cause of action
18 premised on these allegations in this Court.
19

20 III. CONCLUSION

21 Plaintiffs lack subject matter jurisdiction to state a claim based on the federal CSA's
22 preemption of Washington State's CPPA. Additionally, Plaintiffs lack standing to bring Fourth 23 and Fifth Amendment claims premised on a fear of the increased likelihood of federal 24 prosecution under the CPPA for CSA violations. Because Plaintiffs' remaining First Amendment
26

1 and marijuana accessibility claims fail to state a claim on which relief may be granted, the Court
2 dismisses Plaintiffs' cause of action.

3 For the foregoing reasons, Defendants' Motion to Dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1)
4 for lack of subject matter jurisdiction and under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a 5 claim on which relief may be granted (Dkt. No. 20) is GRANTED. This case is dismissed with 6 prejudice.
